

MIT

PROGRAM DETAILS

Program Description

The Master's of Information Technology (MIT) offered at Atlantis University is an intensive graduate degree program that prepares the student to become an IT professional at a senior staff or management level. The objective of this program is contrasted with that of the undergraduate IT curriculum: while students at the undergraduate level are trained to become programmer-analysts, telecommunication administrators, or apprentice database administrators, the master's program prepares graduates to be able to manage such IT professionals.

If you graduate with a Master's of Information Technology degree from AU, you will have acquired the knowledge, training, and qualifications needed to supervise the development and implementation of vanguard IT systems in an interconnected and competitive global marketplace.

Program Objectives

The following important objectives have been built into the Master's of Information Technology program offered at Atlantis University:

1. Provide students with the education and training needed to develop professional IT solutions to real world challenges and problems.
2. impart the theoretical background that students will eventually call upon to strategically manage teams of information technology professionals.
3. Train the student to develop and evaluate vanguard IT systems for the purpose of bringing sustainable competitive advantage to his or her business or organization.
4. Teach the student to administer the development, implementation, and maintenance of enterprise-level system services, while making sure that information security remains a priority.
